

The Center for Joint and Strategic Logistics was established in 2009 to shape the development of logisticians proficient in applying logistics support across the national security enterprise. The Center will become the foremost organization for the study of logistics in support of national security in the U.S. and will remain focused on the strategic pillars listed below. In this effort the Center serves every logistician; serving to ensure their success.

EDUCATION – Influence the logistics learning continuum to produce logisticians that have the best opportunity for success in the contemporary and developing operational environments.

KNOWLEDGE – Create a useable body of knowledge serving the logistics community as a ‘virtual coach’ whenever and wherever needed.

ORGANIZATIONS – Improve the effectiveness of organizations to achieve unity of effort in the delivery of logistics outcomes.

LEADERSHIP – Ensure logisticians can effectively plan, organize & control logistics support to take advantage of interdependent logistics capabilities across the national security enterprise.

Located in Eisenhower Hall on Fort McNair, the Center for Joint and Strategic Logistics hosts and manages seminars, conferences and other meetings to develop Joint Logistics Education capabilities, and supports analytical and research efforts both within the Department of Defense and across the US Government.
