

NATIONAL DEFENSE UNIVERSITY

The National Defense University is the premier Department of Defense institution for national security professional leadership education and reports directly to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The University's instructional programs are committed to excellence in joint professional military education; defense, interagency, and international security strategy education; and enhancing the capacity of students for strategic leadership and decisionmaking in national and international security. The University's faculty is engaged in a broad range of security strategy and public policy related research activities, and its specialized research centers and institute provide programmatic excellence in security-related policy analysis and program evaluation.

The National Defense University is comprised of two campuses: its main campus is at Fort McNair in Washington, D.C., and its southern campus is located in Norfolk, VA. The University is accredited to award the master's degree by the Commission on Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools.

The National Defense University is proud to be a world leader in national and international security education, joint professional military education at the strategic and operational levels, information resources management education, security-related public policy analysis and program evaluation, research, and public service and outreach.

MISSION STATEMENT

The National Defense University prepares military and civilian leaders from the United States and other countries to evaluate national and international security challenges through multi-disciplinary educational and research programs, professional exchanges, and public service and outreach.
